My father had a small estate in Nottinghamshire. I was the third of five sons. His next son to Erasmus College in Cambridge at fifteen years old, where I read but some years, and applied myself close to my studies, but the change of seasons was, although I had a very severe allowance, being too great for a narrow house. I was bound apprentice to Mr. James Bates, an ancient surgeon in London, with whom I continued four years. My father never sent me much more of money, I did them out in learning navigation, and other parts of the mathematics, useful to those who intend to travel, as I always believed it would be, some time or other, my fortune to do. When I left Mr. Bates, I went down to my father's house, by the assistance of him and my uncle John, and some other relations. I got forty pounds, and a promise of thirty pounds a year to maintain me at London. Here I studied physics two years and seven months, knowing it would be useful in long voyages.

A Tale of Two Cities

It was the best of times,
 It was the worst of times,
 It was the age of wisdom,
 It was the age of foolishness,
 It was the epoch of belief,
 It was the epoch of incredulity,
 It was the season of Light,
 It was the season of Darkness,
 It was the spring of hope,
 It was the winter of despair,
 we had everything before us, we had nothing before us, we were all going direct to Heaven, we were all going direct the other way—in short, the period was so far like the present period, that some of its wildest authorial ideas based on its being mixed, for good or for evil, in the supposition degree of comparison only.

There was a king with a large jaw and a queen with a plain face, on the throne of England; there was a king with a large jaw and a queen with a plain face, on the throne of France; on the throne of Spain, and on the throne of Portugal, and on the throne of Sardinia, and on the throne of Sicily, and on the throne of Naples, and on the throne of the Papacy, which was also a throne, the only one of its kind in the world.
